

RESCUERS FIND HERO FOREMAN'S BODY IN TUNNEL

Workmen Saw Him Die After He Had Guided Them to Safety.

After working like beavers for twelve hours, workmen in the Belmont tunnel today came upon the body of their foreman, John Brown, of No. 73 West street, Manhattan, buried under the East River, 200 feet from the Long Island City shore.

DETECTIVE HELD MOB WITH PISTOL.

Negroes at Belmont Tunnel Attacked Fitzpatrick in Attempt to Deliver Prisoner.

Detective Fitzpatrick, of the Third Precinct, while detaining Howard Van Alstyne, a negro, twenty-one years old, of No. 63 Third street, early today at the entrance of the Belmont tunnel, was surrounded by a crowd of negroes, who made such threatening remarks against the taking of their fellow-worker that the detective drew his revolver on them and after many threats to shoot, drove them away.

WOMAN'S GARTER AND COMB CLUES TO CHURCH THIEF

Found in Choir Room of Edifice Where Thefts Are Numerous.

A red silk garter and a tortoise-shell side-comb (are the clues on which the police are working today in an endeavor to catch the thief who for a long time has been robbing members of the congregation of the Church of the Disciples of Christ, at No. 41 West One Hundred and Nineteenth street. The articles were picked up in the room where the women of the choir hang their wraps.

The trouble began when Mr. Briggs, the bass of the choir, lost his overcoat several weeks ago. Miss Seyfast, the organist, next missed her pocketbook. In rapid succession every other member of the choir of thirty voices lost wraps and their contents.
